My research and teaching bring together comparative urban studies, 20th Century U.S. History, and African American and American Studies. This interdisciplinary work largely examines the social, cultural, and intellectual landscape of global cities through the lens of the African Diasporic experience. Related research focuses on universities and urban development, the racial foundations of academic thought, intellectual and mass culture, Black radical thought and transnational social movements, heritage tourism, and 20th and 21st Century art, architecture, and urban design.
